Colts win over Thrashers 6 to 1

The Mountainview Colts went into the Thanksgiving weekend with its winning streak unbroken at six games thanks to a 6 to 1 triumph Oct. 7 over the visiting Three Hills Thrashers.

The teams were evenly matched for the first period in a skating contest that featured end-to-end play, nine to seven shots on goal in favour of the Colts and a goal each.

Tyson Schmidt opened the scoring with a shot from between the face-off circles in the Thrasher end. Colton Anderson and Austin Pedersen earned assists on the goal.

Cody Keith answered for the Thrashers by converting a short-handed breakaway into a dramatic goal.

That ended the scoring for the night against Colts goalie Jake Carlson who played a solid game, building on the Colts' early season improvement in strong defense and goaltending. The Colts have outscored their opponents 41 to 16 in the regular season compared with 27 to 26 in exhibition play.

In the second period Jacob Vander

Zaag scored a shorthanded goal with assists by Chad Gross and Cole Sutherland.

Schmidt notched his second goal of the night when the team was played three against five after Vander Zaag and Ryan Knapp were assessed minor penalties.

Down 4 to 1, the Thrashers never recovered.

In the third period the Colts put on a forechecking clinic, stopping the Thrashers time and time again before they could mount an offence.

The Colts scored twice on goals from passes behind the Thrasher net to players on the edge of the goal crease.

For the fifth goal, Colton Anderson set up Austin Pedersen to outmuscle the defence and score.

In an identical play, Keaton Perigny dumped the puck in to Chad Jamieson behind the net. Jamieson then centered it to Benjamin Strautman out in front and he scored the sixth and final Colts goal.

The Colts faced the Airdrie Thunder Friday and Stettler Lightening Saturday after presstime.

Council to announce new chief administrative officer

BY FRANK DABBS
 MVP Staff

Didsbury's town council will announce the name of the town's new chief administrative officer at its Oct. 13 regular meeting, mayor Rick Mousseau has confirmed.

Applications for the position closed Aug. 31 and council interviewed the candidates for the position Sept. 26.

The person picked for the job was the first choice of all seven members.

Councillors are "excited" by the new hire.

The new CAO will fit in with the present town staff and bring positive change to the way town business is conducted, several councillors said.

No starting date for the new head of the town's administration has been disclosed.

Councillors praised the role played by the Ravenhill Group, the municipal government search and recruiting firm for the clarity it brought to the hiring decision.

"They attracted good candidates and helped us understand all the questions related to the hiring," one councillor said.

Retiring CAO Roy Brown was to leave the town in March 2016.

He has been on sick leave since Jun. 9, 2015 on the advice of his doctors.

Interim chief administrative officer Greg Skothiem, the town's manager of public works, was appointed to fill in for Brown.

In a related development, council, after an in camera meeting Oct. 5, voted unanimously Oct. 5 to retain legal counsel on the Brown file.

In an Oct. 2 press release, Brown said he sent a letter to the mayor on Aug. 14 offering to work at reaching an agreement that cleared the way for council to hire a new chief administrative officer.

He has not received a response to that letter in spite of a number of requests.

Council, meanwhile, has asked the Alberta Municipal Affairs minister to investigate Brown's conduct after an internal probe of his expense and credit card reports.

Multiple vehicle crash highlights safety plans

BY FRANK DABBS
MVP Staff

There was more drama than damage just after dark Oct. 8 when four SUVs collided with a truck trailer when its driver pulled onto Highway 2 from the Berghal/Westcott Road.

There were no serious injuries and none of the drivers involved required medical transport.

According to police, the collisions occurred because the end of the trailer protruded from the merge lane into the left lane. There is no artificial light at the intersection.

Whether the trailer was adequately marked for the dark conditions is being investigated.

The initial investigation indicated that speed and alcohol were not factors, police on the scene reported.

It took some time for investigating police to sort out the situation, according to a witness.

The emergency flashing lights made for a dramatic scene, but fire and EMS units were recalled when officers initially on the scene determined there were no injuries and the by-passer who phoned the accident to 911 had departed because they determined the situation was less serious than it looked.

However, the accident raises questions about access to Highway 2, also known as the Queen Elizabeth II

Highway.

The intersection is slated for an overpass and Alberta Transportation has acquired the land needed to accommodate exit and entrance ramps.

However, a construction date for the overpass has not been set, and there are questions about will it ever be in the foreseeable future.

With overpasses three miles to the north and three miles to the south of it, residents and farmland owners around the intersection said access to the highway could be closed without great inconvenience to them.

Alberta Transportation at the beginning of October asked for consultants to submit proposals that include costs for a major study into the future widening of the highway.

This planning study is the beginning of a long-term project that will determine construction projects on the highway for many years, said a transportation official.

"There are no quick answers, however safety is perhaps the most important consideration for planning the future of the highway."

"This is the longest provincial highway in Canada, and the only one that directly links two major cities."

"It is one of the most important pieces of highway infrastructure in Alberta and its use needs to be planned accordingly."

Olds RCMP investigating possible paving scam

BY DOUG COLLIE
MVP Staff

Olds RCMP are trying to determine whether an alleged paving scam conducted in Saskatchewan may have migrated to this community.

On Oct. 5, Olds RCMP received a complaint that two suspicious men had approached a home on 47 St. soliciting paving services.

A witness said one of the men, believed to be in his 30s, appeared to speak with an Irish accent. He had short, brown hair and "scruffy facial hair," according to RCMP. He was described as being about six feet tall, weighing about 180 pounds.

The two men left the area in a newer model white Chevrolet three-quarter or one-ton pickup.

Saskatchewan RCMP members are investigating similar incidents in which people said to be representing a paving company are soliciting work from residents. However those cases are said to be a scam because the company does not exist.

"Olds RCMP continue to investigate this local case to determine whether it is legitimate or fraudulent," a news release says.

"Police are reminding the public to gather as much information as possible regarding any company that they are considering hiring for service."

If you believe you have become a victim of fraud, contact police.

The story of a refugee

Joseph Shi's journey to Canada

BY PATRICIA RILEY
MVP Staff

Joseph Shi believes it was a trail of miracles that led him to where he is today.

He was arrested in China nearly 30 years ago for leading a counter-revolutionary group and spent seven years in prison before fleeing the country and overcoming multiple hurdles en route to Canada.

He is now a Canadian citizen, has a family and is a restaurant owner and municipal councillor in Cremona.

The arrest

Shi was arrested in the in China, in 1989 at age 25. He was sentenced to eight years in prison for leading a counter-revolutionary group. He also published an underground newsletter to educate people that China wasn't a communist country.

As a believer of communism, he felt the Chinese government was brainwashing citizens by appearing communist but not following the communism theory.

"Communism or socialism means everybody's equal and the country should at least serve justice, but in China there is no justice. And the government made it like a classified group of people - one class had more power over the other, that's not equal at all," said Shi.

He was released from prison seven years later at age 32. His sentence was reduced because he said he bowed to the government's demands to admit he was wrong.

"So in the fifth year, I couldn't endure the life like that anymore, so I told them 'OK, you get what you want now' and they reduced one year for me. I became weak at that time, so I gave in."

He said the first two years in prison were the worst and was like living in "hell".

"In the prison you're forced to do brainwashing. They want you to confess to them you are wrong everyday. They force you to read something and write about the article that you don't believe at all," he said.

"And you have to condemn yourself everyday, that's required."

He would eat two meals a day, which was usually old rice and poor quality cabbage, and says other criminals would beat him.

In 1991, the U.S. Department of State showed concern for 105 prisoners and Shi was one of them. After that, his life in prison got a little better, he said.

"That's why when I came to Canada I always told people 'show your concern, if you have concerns over some political prisoner's treatment, show your concerns, show your support,'" he said.

"The Chinese government does think twice when they know the outside is concerned."

While he was in prison his friend brought him an American book called Pretty in Pink.

Shi had learned English while he was in school, so he was able to read it.

He read it and translated the story into Chinese for other prisoners, but they didn't believe he was telling the real story because one of the characters was poor but was able to drive a vehicle and drink beer.

"In China, that's luxury life," said Shi.

"From that book I knew that we were cheated by the Chinese government. From that book I knew the outside world was not what the Chinese government had been telling."

Life after prison

After Shi was released from prison, he bounced from job to job before fleeing the country.

Government officials would approach tell his employer to fire him.

They made it so he had no income and he said he became homeless.

I realized I could not live in China anymore, so I ran away and walked through the border through Burma to Thailand."

He didn't think he would be successful, but he felt like he had nothing to lose.

His girlfriend at the time, Christina, who is now his wife, gave him money to leave the country. He said she was an "ordinary woman."

"At that time, ordinary girls wouldn't even get close to me because of my background. No girls would even look at me or think of me as a good man," he said.

Christina was a successful accountant and made about 10 times more money than ordinary workers.

"I told her if you date me, you might lose your job."

"But she didn't care. She paid for my rent and gave me money to buy food, but I knew that for her I needed to run away."

En route to Canada

Shi walked 50 kilometres through a jungle and didn't have anything with him except for $300 U.S. from Christina. But that was when his first miracle came.

"It was a miracle. I didn't make any mistake. After 24 to 25 hours I walked out of that jungle," he said, adding he came across dangerous animals including poisonous snakes along the way.

He met a Burmese military officer at the other side of the jungle and that was when his second miracle came.

He gave the money to the officer, who arranged transportation for him to get to the border between Burma and Thailand.

"That's a miracle again. Later on I heard from other people that most of the time the military officer would keep the money and also keep me there for ransom and ask for much more than $300," he said.

The driver took him to the Thailand border and when he arrived in Thailand he ended up back in jail for illegal entry.

Chinese diplomats went to the jail to take him back to China, he said.

That's when his third miracle came. On that same day, a Canadian missionary was visiting prisoners there.

The missionary asked the guard why the diplomats were visiting Shi, and the guard told him Shi was a Tiananmen Square student, which wasn't true.

After the missionary realized the diplomats were there to take him back to China, he decided to help.

He brought Shi two loaves of bread but told him not to examine in front of anyone.

When Shi was alone, he found money inside equal to $200 Canadian.

The money was meant to be used as a bribe for guards to release him, he said.

He offered the guard the money, but the guard wouldn't release him because arrangements had already been made to fly him back to China.

But that's when his next miracle came.

"It just happened that three days before my flight the guard who was guarding me got sick and another new guard came in," he said.

"I just took the chance, I just offered him the money and he let me go."

After he was released he called the Canadian missionary who drove an expensive car to pick him up from where he was hiding and drove him to the train station.

He said police wouldn't check for prisoners in expensive cars in Thailand. The missionary bought him a first class train ticket to Bangkok for that same reason.

After Shi arrived in Bangkok, he was protected by the United Nations.

From there, he said United Nations officials provided him with a job as an interpreter and he applied to go to Canada as a refugee. He was approved in March of 2000 at age 37 and became a Canadian citizen in 2004.

Christina met him in Bangkok and they were married there before moving to Canada together.

Life in Canada

When Shi and Christina arrived in Canada, they lived in Vancouver for six years.

Shi received special admission to Langara College where he studied accounting. He dropped out of high school in Grade 11 while living in China, so he felt privileged to go to college.

After he graduated, they moved to Rogers Pass and Shi worked as a manager at the Glacier Park Lodge.

He admits he became greedy and wanted more money. He was offered more money at a hotel in Lake Louise so he transferred, but quit because he didn't like the way things were managed.

He was ashamed with his decision so he wanted to move to a small community where no one knew him, which led him to Cremona.

The Oriental Kitchen restaurant was listed for sale. He and Christina bought it and have been running it ever since.

"After four years of running the restaurant, we became friends with everybody here (in Cremona), so I won the most votes in the last (municipal) election," he said.

He wanted to become a councillor in 2013 when there was turmoil in the village. He also didn't agree with some of the decisions made by the previous council.

He and Christina never had children of their own, but recently adopted an 11-year-old boy from China who had immigrated to Canada about 10 months ago.

"I want to give him a long-term family life."

Although Shi wasn't religious before, he has become a Christian because of his journey.

"I think my life has some purpose, not by me, by creators," he said. "I like to be involved in politics and I like to serve the people and I like to make the world look better."

The Roy Brown legacy

This week Didsbury's municipal council will define its legacy in a showdown with its chief administrative officer Roy Brown.

Brown has been absent from his office since June 9 when he "was hospitalized and due to his medical condition was advised by his doctors not to return to work until mid-October," he said in a press release he issued Oct. 2.

FRANK DABBS

His contract with the town expires in March 2016.

He is on disability pay.

There is an interim acting CAO appointed in July.

Brown sent a letter to mayor Rick Mousseau on Aug. 4 "offering to work at reaching an agreement that would allow council to move forward with hiring a new chief administrative officer."

The mayor has not responded and council hired a new CAO.

Council also asked Alberta Municipal Affairs to investigate Brown's conduct.

All of this is like water off a duck's back to Brown. He intends to return to work Oct. 13 after the Thanksgiving weekend.

Council has retained legal counsel to advise it on how to deal with the Brown file.

Or not.

Council can stand up to Brown.

Recently, council has been unanimous about the future of the town's staffing.

Since June 9, the culture of fear and intimidation in town hall has waned.

In the past, Brown bulldozed over opposition from both elected council members and town administrative and operating staff.

Enough!

If Roy Brown could point to a stellar record of achievement, the town might welcome him back, warts and all.

Such is not the case.

His record, rather, is one of divisiveness.

His legacy is his failure to distinguish between the authority of the elected council to make policy and take decisions and the administration's job as an implementer of the will of the elected officials.

It's the way of the world that Brown would expect a payout.

He thinks council chose in his absence "to take actions that have discredited" him in spite of 10 years of "exemplary performance reviews."

Well, beauty is in the eye of the beholder.

The seven people on council — ordinary citizens who stepped up and convinced voters to elect them — did not sign on for this unpleasant moment.

But they are elected and with that sometimes comes onerous responsibilities.

It is said that when Harold MacMillan finished his final term as British prime minister, a journalist asked him what was the most difficult thing about his job.

"Events, dear boy, events," replied MacMillan.

An event named Roy Brown threatens to blow Didsbury's council off course.

How they deal with this event will define their legacy.

Double standards in foreign policy

BY SIMON DUCATEL

The Harper government shakes its finger scolding Russia with one hand while extending the other hand in friendship to Saudi Arabia, a regime with an infamous reputation for ruthless rules, oppressing women's rights and suppressing free expression.

Sanctions have been placed on Russia over the whole debacle in the Ukraine, but it's business as usual with the land of women's rights abuses and beatings. Canada secured its largest military contract ever, valued at just shy of $15 billion, to provide Saudi Arabia with armoured fighting vehicles.

The saddest part is there are supposed to be rules barring Canada from manufacturing and providing weapons of war to flagrant abusers of human rights.

"If a country with Saudi Arabia's dire human rights record is deemed eligible to receive Canadian-made military goods, it is hard to comprehend what sort of record a country must have to actually trigger the pertinent human rights safeguards," says an article on opencanada.org.

How any Conservative can defend with a straight face their government's double standards on foreign affairs is baffling.

Granted, Russia is no stalwart defender of human rights. But compared to Saudi Arabia, where a citizen by the name of Raif Badawi was not long ago sentenced to 10 years and 1,000 lashes spread out over time — people usually die after less than 100 lashes in a row — for the "crime" of espousing liberal, secular views online, Putin's regime seems tame in comparison.

To be fair to Harper's government, chances are any other party in charge would act no differently. Unions pushed the NDP to support the deal. We're all too happy to ally ourselves with an oppressive regime that controls every aspect of a woman's life and severely punishes anyone who is critical of the state.

I guess being the "good guys" sure is convenient.

Apparently it gives us cart blanche to self-righteously do whatever we want on a global stage without scrutiny. How can we do any wrong, we're the good guys!

Russia bombing rebels fighting Assad's regime in Syria is a travesty, but U.S.-led NATO forces bombing a hospital in Afghanistan — killing 12 doctors and 10 patients — is apparently no big deal.

Médecins Sans Frontières (Doctors Without Borders) staff reported no combat on the premises before the recent air strikes, and for about an hour of continued bombardment pleaded with American and Afghan channels to cease and desist, all to no avail.

Let's pretend for a moment the Taliban had infiltrated the hospital and were using it to coordinate attacks on Afghan security forces. That would mean the doctors and staff would essentially be hostages. Is the most rational course of action then to just bomb the facility, knowing innocent lives are in unwittingly in the cross fire?

American officials simply wrote the hospital strike off as a "mistake" but MSF staff are calling the sustained air strikes on the clinic, which is no longer being used, a "war crime."

Since we're the good guys, it's unlikely anyone will be held accountable to any meaningful level.

Now just imagine the headlines if Russia had bombed a hospital and killed staff and patients.

Ideologies aside, no democratically elected government — especially one that touts its respect for human rights — should be so hypocritical as to scolding one violator of human rights while gladly doing business with another.

How can we honestly believe we stand for human rights when our government has no scruples when dealing with an oppressive regime that crushes dissent? At this rate, perhaps we could strike a deal to make armoured fighting vehicles for North Korea.

Because hey, if a deal with the devil represents billions of dollars and jobs at home, why not, right?

LeClaire wins world's youth judging at Clydesdale 'olympics'

BY FRANK DABBS
MVP Staff

Jocelyn LeClaire of Green Leaf Clydesdales farm near Didsbury won her first world award Oct. 2 at the five-day 2015 World Clydesdale Show in London, Ont.

LeClaire won the Youth Judging Award in a category that drew 20 international young horse aficionados.

LeClaire said the contestants were "judged for judging."

They were asked to rank four Clydesdales and give their reasons for the order in a short verbal presentation and in writing.

She said the horses were judged for their comportment, their movement and their presentation – alertness and breeding and features like a long neck, the size of the foot and, in a Clydesdale, the silkiness and length of the hair.

"I'm not a good public speaker yet, so I prefer the written evaluation," she said.

LeClaire entered the decorating class that judges how well contestants braid the horse's mane and put it's tail in a bun.

She also competed in the showmanship class.

"You get judged by how well you present the horse."

"I didn't win in those classes but I learned a lot," she said.

The Canadian Clydesdale Association puts on the show. It has become known in draft horse circles as the Clydesdale olympics because it is held at four-year intervals and attracts entries from North America, Australia and Europe.

This year, 569 horses competed in the five-day event.

The 14-year-old Didsbury High School student is the youngest of three daughters, including Hanna and Amy, in the well-know draft horse family.

Their father, Roger, has been active in draft horse business for more than 30 years, is a member of the Wild Rose Draft Horse Association and in demand across North America as a judge.

He has owned and bred some of the world's best Clydesdale stallions.

Draft horses are work horses – hauling and plowing – and bigger than the average horse – 1,000 to 2,200 pounds," said Jocelyn.

Roger began to teach his girls how to relate to and handle Clydesdales at a very young age.

"As long as I can remember, I've been around horses," Jocelyn said.

"I think I was eight or so when my Dad started to teach me how to braid."

"We have travelled all over the world for Clydesdale shows," said Jocelyn's sister Amy.

"We have friends we've met in many countries."

Jocelyn said the shows give Green Leaf farm the opportunity to draw attention to their breeding program.

"You are there (at the shows) to promote your farm and its breeding program," said Amy.

"You are doing well in the show and they are going to want to buy the offspring of your mares."

Your horses have the background and the pedigree."

Jocelyn posed for Noel West, the Review's photographer with her sister Hanna's mare

Hope and the business side of Green Leaf wasn't entirely out of mind, even with the excitement of winning a world's championship and receiving media attention.

"Hope is a nice mare with good breeding," said Jocelyn.

"She produces awesome offspring."

"People will want that quality in their Clydesdales."

Enrolment in oil-related college programs down 20 per cent

BY DOUG COLLIE
MVP Staff

Enrolment in oil-related programs at Olds College is down about 20 per cent this year, because students fear job prospects in that industry may not be good.

That's the assessment of Paul Gaudette, the college's registrar and executive director of student services.

However, enrolment numbers for the college overall are up slightly from previous years, he says.

Gaudette says the number of applications and admissions in the college's land agent program fell by about 20 per cent this year, to about 25 students from 35 to 40 a year or two ago.

"We were shooting for 35 students and we didn't quite meet our goal there," he told the Albertan. "About a year or two ago we would have been closer to our cap of between 35 and 40 students."

The benchmark price of oil has crashed from a high of more than $100 a barrel in the spring/summer of 2014 to just under $49 (Cdn.) a barrel as of Oct. 7. And that figure is actually up from where it was several months ago.

"I think students get a little leery of the employment outcomes, and so we saw a decrease of about a third in just the applications as well. So people are leery of getting into that sector when they know the oil industry's struggling a bit," he added.

The drop in students had no impact on the employment of instructors in that program, Gaudette said.

"There were no changes in employment at all (in that program)," he said.

In fact, Gaudette said there's a bright side to the lower numbers because that improves the ratio of instructor to student.

Gaudette said overall, about 2,350 students are enrolled in Olds College this year, which is actually an increase of about 25 students.

There's good reason for that, Gaudette says.

"We modified the caps a little bit in some of our programs just slightly, which allowed us to take a few extra students," he said.

"Basically, we're continuing to see a lot of interest in our most popular programs; things like animal health technology, brewmaster program, land and water resources and those things."

Police briefs

Sexual assault charge

Didsbury RCMP officers recently assisted with a sexual assault investigation on a Didsbury child, which led to the arrest of a Thorsby man.

The name of the man charged in the case is not being released to protect the identity of the child.

Impaired drivers arrested

Three impaired drivers were arrested by Didsbury RCMP officers last week.

Officers received a complaint of a person driving erratically on Sept. 7 and were able to pull the vehicle over on Highway 2A near Twp. Rd. 312.

The female driver provided a breath sample and police say she blew nearly three times the legal limit.

Police also pulled over a vehicle in the same area around midnight on Sept. 13 after observing the vehicle driving erratically. The male driver was also impaired, police said.

On Sept. 15, an impaired driver was charged with refusal to provide a breath sample in the Water Valley area.

Officers aren't releasing the names of the drivers at this time.

iPhone found

Didsbury RCMP officers found an iPhone 6 along the ditch on Highway 22 on Sept. 3.

They are looking for the owner of the phone so it can be returned to them.

Gun lost

A 12-gauge shotgun is lost after falling off the back of a quad in the Burnt Timber area on Sept. 13.

Didsbury RCMP officers are asking for members of the public to turn it in if found.

Federal election day is Monday

Are you ready to vote?

If you're a Canadian citizen, 18 or older, you can vote in the federal election.

Your voter information card tells you when and where to vote.

If you didn't receive your card, you can still register and vote at your polling place.

To find out where to vote, and what ID to bring, visit elections.ca or call 1-800-463-6868 (TTY 1-800-361-8935).

Elections Canada has all the information you need to be ready to vote.

Now it's get out the vote

BY FRANK DABBS
MVP Staff

It's back to the basics – door-knocking, leaflet drops, installing signs – for major candidates in Red Deer-Mountain View during the final week of the election campaign.

The candidates will be attending barbecues, forums and coffee parties, visiting seniors' residences and doing rush hour wave-and-honk blitzes in Red Deer.

On election day teams of volunteers will help get out voters identified as supporters through the campaign.

"We encourage them to go to the polling station if they have supported us when we go to the door," said a spokesperson for Conservative hopeful Earl Dreeshen.

Other candidates acknowledge the horsepower of the Dreeshen campaign.

"You know how serious this is when you see the commitment of our volunteers, a Dreeshen supporter said.

The playbooks for the NDP, Liberal and Conservative parties look the same; the difference is in the resources each team of volunteers brings to the table.

"Eleven weeks is a long campaign and the volunteers are tired," NDP candidate Paul Harris said.

"They are accustomed to a four-week campaign, and many have been virtually full-time volunteers."

Harris said the NDP team of 50 plans a "get out the vote" process during the entire weekend before the Monday voting day.

"The final week will be pretty much the same as the first week," said Liberal contestant Chandra Kastern.

"Long hours and more intense each day.

"It is an extremely long campaign and quite the experience," she said.

"We are raising a generation of voters, I hope.

"My generation hasn't done a very good job of being voters."

On election day, the Didsbury polls will be at the Memorial Complex and arena.

Rural residents can check the location of their polling station by going to the Elections Canada website at www.elections.ca and entering their postal code in the box on the home page.

Chamber unveils small business awards nominees

BY FRANK DABBS
MVP Staff

The Didsbury and District Chamber of Commerce has announced 16 nominees in three categories for the 2015 small business awards.

The winners will be announced at the annual awards banquet Oct. 20 at the Elks Hall, celebrating excellence in business organizations, with retired hockey star and sports commentator Charlie Simmer as the featured guest.

Chamber president Barbara Neufeld said the awards celebrate the best Didsbury small businesses that represent 99.8 per cent of all companies in the Canadian economy that employ 64 per cent of private sector workers.

The nominees for the 2015 Small Business of the Year are Didsbury AG Foods, Didsbury Home Hardware, Didsbury Veterinary Services, Fish Farms, Front Porch Realty, Kohut Family Farm, Mugs Coffee House, Pine & Ivy Flowers & Gifts, Unique Stained Glass Works and Wild Rose Machinery.

The nominees for the 2015 New Business of the Year are Grr Letz Eat, Gym-Nana Fitness and The Avenue Bakery & Bakeshoppe.

The nominees for the 2015 Not for Profit Organization of the Year are Didsbury Car Club, Didsbury Library and Mountain View Arts Society.

There will be a silent auction at the awards banquet as well as Charlie Simmer's speech.

Simmer had back-to-back 56 goal seasons with the L.A. Kings and still holds the NHL record for shooting percentage of 31.75, won in the 1981.

To illustrate the value of Didsbury's small business week, Neufeld said that 10,000 Canadian business people attend small business week events.

"Imagine if all 99.8 per cent of these Canadian entrepreneurs and all 64 per cent of private sector workers were to meet together just once?"

"Learning, sharing ideas, building networks and finding business opportunities?"

"Wow!"

A local resident is holding a book launch party to celebrate and unveil her first book, Smiling Single Mom - It's ALL Right.

The book launch will be held Oct. 24 at 1 p.m. in Pandora's Boox and Tea in Olds.

The book, by Carol Taylor, a local teacher and former Didsbury resident, is a story of her fight with cancer.

During the event, Taylor will read from the book and answer questions. Draws for prizes will also be held.

Also during the party, one dollar from every book sold will be donated to the Tom Baker Cancer Centre in Calgary because Taylor says the centre's staff helped her and her boys when she was going through cancer treatments.

In July, 2011, Taylor was doing a monthly breast exam when she discovered a lump in her right breast.

"After going through a mastectomy and chemotherapy, she decided that her body had been through enough and listened to her heart which told her that radiation and drugs were not needed and she should focus on her healing," a news release says.

Taylor says she's learned "how important it is to be surrounded with love, family and friendship and how 'seeing the rightness' can be just as important in the healing process as any medication."

Taylor hopes to write more books in the future.

Ducks Unlimited ramps up wetland restoration

BY FRANK DABBS
MVP Staff

Ducks Unlimited is strengthening wetland restoration in Alberta to help mitigate the rural impact of droughts and floods.

The conservation organization has received a funding top up from Alberta's watershed resiliency and restoration program and is looking for farmers and landowners to participate in two programs.

A 10-year lease program compensates landowners for wetland areas restored at DUC expense and the landowner manages the restored area and uses it for compatible purposes such as haying or grazing. The Revolving Land Purchase program purchases land for wetland and upland game restoration and registers a conservation easement on the land title.

The land is sold back to the local agricultural community with the assurance that valuable wetland function and natural ecosystems will be maintained for long-term benefit.
